SELECTED MICROFINANCE CRISES: PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE

The Covid-19 pandemic is the most recent crisis to face the microfinance sector, but it was far from the first. From its earliest years, crises have appeared throughout the modern history of microfinance, and the responses they engendered have included some of the most significant reforms and innovations in the sector. In their article for the Spring 2024 special microfinance issue of the Oxford Review of Economic Policy, Daniel Rozas and Sam Mendelson review some of the key crises from the 1980s to the present. They will discuss their findings and consider what this means for responses to future crises.
